

Words. A local animal rescue affectionately refers to their three-legged dogs as “tri-pawds.” A pet-friendly restaurant dubbed their outdoor eating area the “pet-io.” The Guardian Campaign reminds us to say we are animal guardians, not owners. And shelter animals are more likely to be adopted with names like Cuddles and Elvis, than Nippy and Zero. Words are very, very important.

In Words That Warm Our Hearts we highlight words that inspire. Whether it's a quote from Jane Goodall promoting caring without borders, or a volunteer singing the praises of doing shelter laundry, these words make us feel good. When we feel good about what we do it gives us energy to do even more for animals in need.

Jim's favorite word is SOLD because that means he can give $500 to a local animal rescue. After he sold his last house he presented a check to Small Dog Rescue of Minnesota. The photo shows two rescue volunteers and two cute pups at an adoption event. We're guessing their favorite word is LOVE. Thanks for all you do for animals!
